[Cepyright, 1893.1 CHAPTER V.

The emperor had committed himself to my care. The emperor was dead. Those were the two thoughts which clanged in my head until I had no room for any other ones. He had come with me, and he was dead. I had done what he had ordered when living. I had revenged him when dead. But what of all that? The world would look upon me as responsible. They might even look upon me as the assassin. What could I prove? What witnesses had 1? Might I not have been the accomplice of these wretches! Yes, yes, I was sternally dishonored—the lowest, most desnicable greative in all Fereiga [This eternally dishonored—the lowest, most despicable croature in all France. This, then, was the end of my fine military ambitions of the hopes of my mother. I laughed bitterly at the thought. And what was I to do now? Was I to go to Fontainbleau, to wake up the palace, and to inform them that the groat emperor had been murdered within a pace of me. I could not do it—no, I could not do it! There was but one course for an honorable gentleman whom Fate had placed in so cruel a position. I would fall upon my dishonored sword and so share, since I could not avert, and so share, since I could not avert, the emperor's fate. I rose with my nerves strung to this last pitebus deed, and as I did so my oyes fell upon something which struck the breath from my lips. The emperor was standing before me. He was not more than ten yards off, with the moon shining straight upon his cold, pale face. He wore his gray overcoat, but the hood was turned back overcoat, but the hood was turned back and the front open, so that I could see the green coat of the Guides, and the white breeches. His hands were clasped behind his back, and his ching sunk forward upon his breast in the way that the property of the country o sunk forward upon his breast in the way that was usual with him.

"Well," said he, in his hardest and most abrupt voice, "what account do you give of yourself?"

I believe that if he had stood in silence for another minute my brain would have given away. But those sharp, military accents were exactly what I needed to bring me to myself. Living or dead, here was the emperor what I needed to bring me to myeli. Living or dead, here was the emperor standing before me, and asking me questions. I sprang to the sainte.
"You have killed one, I see?" said he, ierking his head toward the beech.
"You size."

"Yes, sire."

"And the other escaped?"

"No, sire; I killed him, also."

"What!" he cried, "Do I understand that you have killed them both?" He approached me as he spoke, with a smile, which set his eyes and teeth gleaming in the moonlight.

"One body lies there, sire," I answered; "the other is in the toolhouse at the quarry."

swered; "the other is in the toolhouse at the quarry."
"Then the brothers of Ajaccio are no more," he cried, and after a pause; "The shadow has passed me forever." Then he bent forward and laid his hand upon my shoulder.
"You have done very well, my young friend," eaid he, "You have lived up to your reputation."

He was flesh and blood, then, this emperor. I could feel the little plumppalm that rested upon me. And yet I could not get over what I had seen with my own eyes, and so I stared at him in such bewilderment that he broke once more into one of his smiles.
"Yo, no, Monsieur Gerard," said he.
"I am not a ghost, and you have not

"No, no, Monsieur Gerard," said he.
"I am not a ghost, and you have not seen me killed. You will come here and all will be clear to you."

He turned as he spoke, and led the way toward the great beech stump.

The bodies were still lying upon the ground, and two men were standing beside them. As we approached, I saw Hever he thought that any one might have a claim upon him he took the first opportunity to show him the gulf that lay between. I saluted and was silent, but I must confess to you that it hurt mo after all that had passed between us. He led on to the palace, where we passed through the side door and up into his own cabinet. There were a couple of grenadiers at the staircase, and their eyes started out from under their fur caps, I promise you, when and their eyes started out from under their fur caps, I promise you, when they saw a young lieutenant of hussars coing up to the emperor's room at mid-night. look came over his face as he spoke, and it seemed to me that all that was French had gone out of him, and that it was the pure Corsican, the man of strong passions and of strange revenges, who stood before mo. His memory had gone back to those early days of his,

and for five minutes, wrapped in thought, he paced up and down the room with his quick little tiger steps.
Then with an impatient wave of his hands he came back to his palace and hands he came back to his palace and

"The rules of such a society," he continued, "are all very well for a private citizen. In the old days there was no more loyal brother than I. But cirmore loyal brother than I. But circumstances change, and it would be neither for my welfare nor for that of France that I should now submit myself to them. They wanted to hold me to it, and so brought their fate upon their own heads.

"These were the two chiefs of the order, and they had come from Corsica to summon me to meet them at the spot which they named. I knew what such a summons meant. No man had over returned from obeying one. On the

What a delirium of joy came upon me when these few words made everything clear to me. He smiled again as he saw the delight which urged me almost to throw my arms round him and to embrace him, but he moved a step away, as if he had divined my impulse. "You are unhurt?" he asked.

"I am unhurt, sire. But in another minute I should in my despair"—
"Tut, tut!" he interrupted. "You did very well. He should himself have been more on his guard. I saw everything which passed."

"You did not hear me follow you through the woods, then? I harvely lest sight of you from the moment that you left your quarters until poor defond in fell. The counterfeit emperor was in front of you, and the real one behind. You will now escort me back to the place."

He whispered an order to his Mannelukes, who saluted in silence and romained where they were standing. For my part, I followed the emperor with my pelisse bursting with pride. My word, I have always carried myself as a hussan should, but Lasalle himself new form of 1—I, Etienne Gerard—the confidant of the light cavalry, the man who slew the would-be assassins of Napoleon. But he noticed my bearing, and turned upon me like a blight.
